Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities

What is the Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities?
The Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities assists departments in identifying the team members who will provide input and support for the workforce planning effort. Although it is recommended at least one staff be dedicated full time to workforce planning, a comprehensive effort is the responsibility of multiple division/program areas at varying levels of the department. A multi-disciplinary team provides perspective which helps ensure the workforce plan meets the strategic business needs of all division/program areas. With the understanding that departments often have limited resources to commit to workforce planning, the Steering Committee structure outlined below allows for multiple team members with varying time commitment levels, who together form a comprehensive workforce planning team.

When should a department use the Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities?
The Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities is used when a department is ready to compile the team that will assist with the department’s workforce planning efforts. The team is often compiled at the beginning of workforce planning efforts, as recommended in Phase 1 of the State of California Workforce Planning Model. First, gain executive buy-in for workforce planning in order to have executive level support in coordinating the staffing resources recommended for the Steering Committee.

Who should use the Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities?
The individual(s) tasked with pursuing workforce planning for a department use the Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities to guide in compiling the team that will assist them with workforce planning efforts.

How does a department use the Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities?
The Steering Committee Roles and Responsibilities identifies which area the committee member(s) is likely to come from, each member’s roles and responsibilities and the benefit of the member’s involvement.
